

Final countdown to submit nominations

If you thrive under the pressure of a deadline this is your time! There's less than one week to submit a nomination for the 2023 Queensland Training Awards.

Whether you are nominating yourself or a worthy apprentice, trainee, vocational student, teacher or trainer, employer (large, medium or small), community training initiative, training provider (large or small) or industry partnership that you know, there's only a few days left, so get cracking.

Register your account in the portal to get started and follow the advice in our five easy steps to enter page.

Recognising the contributions and commitment from different people and organisations is a valuable process for everyone involved in raising the standard and outcomes for training in Queensland each year.

Each finalist's story, whether they take home an award or not, provides another example of how training develops the workers needed in the state's communities and key industries.

Good luck everyone and thank you for your help finding Queenslanders and organisations making a positive impact through training.

Sponsorships

There are still some opportunities to sponsor the 2023 Queensland Training Awards. If you are interested you can find out more online and contact us to express your interest.

What's next

Completed nominations will soon be handed over to our hard-working judging panels, who will interview selected nominees before choosing finalists who will be announced ahead of our regional award ceremonies.

After the 2023 nomination window closes at midnight on Wednesday 15 March, people will be able to complete an expression of interest to be kept up to date on future nomination rounds.

Remember, while most of Queensland's representatives for the 2023 Australian Training Awards first go through the Queensland Training Awards, there are five direct entry categories that have just opened for nominations. Review the eligibility and selection criteria to consider if these categories are right for you:

- Outstanding Achievement in the VET and Skills Sector Award
- Australian Apprenticeships Employer Award
- School Pathways to VET Award
- Excellence in Language, Literacy and Numeracy Practice Award
- Innovation in VET Award

Nominations for these awards will close on 31 May 2023. This year's Australian Training Awards gala event will be held in Hobart in November and Queensland will have a strong team representing us.
