

Contacting a young person in a youth detention centre

Fundamental to a young person's rights, wellbeing, and rehabilitation while in youth detention is the support and maintenance of the relationship with their legal representative. This factsheet provides legal representatives with key information to ensure requests for contact with young people are facilitated in a timely manner.

Each young person in a youth detention centre (YDC) has a caseworker assigned to them. Legal representatives are able to directly contact their client's caseworker.

Please contact the caseworker or casework team directly if:

- there is an issue with accessing a client
- you have a particular request
- the matter is urgent.

Access to a young person

Legal representatives are able to access a young person by:

- visiting in person at the YDC
- connecting via videolink
- speaking over the phone.

Young people have access to a phone in their accommodation units. Once their legal representative has been added to their phone list, they are able to phone their legal representative as many times as they need to, without time limits. Legal phone calls are not part of the phone time a young person is allocated.

It is important to note young people are engaged in education, programs and activities during the day. This includes going to structured day, health appointments, cultural activities and visits.

During normal routine, young people can contact their legal representative when they are not at school or doing programs. The best times for a young person to contact their legal representative are when they have returned to their accommodation:

- for morning tea
- at lunch
- after school.

To ensure your contact with young people is as effective as possible, consider:

- giving as much notice as you can when requesting contact
- providing clear requirements about what might be needed during each contact
- requesting any particular technology that is needed as part of the visit
- a weekend visit if more time is required with a young person.
