

Who to talk to

You must talk to your Youth Justice officer as soon as possible about any problems you have with your order.

 Name _____

 Phone _____

Reporting

You must report to a Youth Justice officer within one business day unless you are told otherwise.

Your Youth Justice officer will explain your order requirements to you and arrange the next steps.

 Where _____

 When _____

 Phone _____

Need more information?

Web

www.qld.gov.au/youthjustice

www.youthjustice.qld.gov.au

The material presented in this publication is distributed by the Queensland Government for information only and is subject to change without notice. The Queensland Government disclaims all responsibility and liability (including liability in negligence) for all expenses, losses, damages and costs incurred as a result of the information being inaccurate or incomplete in any way and for any reason. © State of Queensland 2019

Intensive supervision orders

for young people

A court might make an intensive supervision order if you have already been on other orders and you are now at risk of going to detention.

You can be given an intensive supervision order if you are younger than 13 years of age at the time of sentence.

An intensive supervision order means you can stay in the community on a structured program of intensive supervision and support.

An intensive supervision order will:

- include activities that help you to stop offending
- supervise you for a period of time
- support you to be part of your family and community in a positive way.

What it involves

Before you get an intensive supervision order, the court must consider a pre-sentence report written by a Youth Justice officer.

The pre-sentence report will tell the court more information about you.

You will meet with a Youth Justice officer to put together an intensive supervision order program.

We will design the intensive supervision order program to suit your individual needs.

This will happen in the weeks before you are sentenced.

An intensive supervision order program has a number of parts:

- activities to stop you from offending
- school
- activities to help you be involved in your family and community in a positive way.

Rules

- You must take part in all of the activities that you agreed to in your intensive supervision order program.
- You must not break the law.
- You must follow every reasonable direction given by Youth Justice officers.
- You must report and receive visits as directed by your Youth Justice officer.
- You or your parent/carer must tell your Youth Justice officer about any changes in your life like change of address or school. You must do this within two days of any change.
- You must get permission from a Youth Justice officer if you wish to leave Queensland while you have an order.

Extra rules (conditions) might be added when the court thinks that you need extra:

- supervision
- counselling
- help in the community.

These conditions must be followed.

Breaking the rules

You must do what is on your order or there may be consequences.

Your Youth Justice officer will talk with you about this. You may be given a warning in writing.

You must get back on track if you get a warning or you may have to go back to court.

The court will decide if you are still allowed to do the intensive supervision order. The court may decide to give you another order.

You must not commit more offences while on an intensive supervision order. This is very serious. The court may hold you in breach of your order. This means the court gave you rules to obey and you did not obey those rules. The court may give you further penalties.